SERVICE ANIMALS

UPL allows service animals to accompany people with disabilities in all areas of the library where the public is allowed to go.

- Service animals are not required to wear special vests or have documentation
- Service animals must be under their person's control at all times
- If the animal is out of the person's control and/or is barking, growling, jumping, urinating, or defecating in the library, UPL staff will ask that the animal be removed from the library

The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) defines a service animal as: Any dog or miniature horse that is individually trained to do work or perform tasks for the benefit of an individual with a disability, including a physical, sensory, psychiatric, intellectual, or other mental disability. A service animal is a working animal, not a pet. Other species of animal are not service animals under the ADA. To determine if an animal is a service animal, two questions may be asked: 1. Is this animal required because of a disability? 2. What work or task has this animal been trained to perform?

Other animals may visit the library for special programs, with approval from the library director.

UNATTENDED CHILDREN IN THE LIBRARY

Children are welcome to use the library at all times. The library is a public space and library personnel do not provide supervision or assume responsibility for children.

A parent or guardian may not leave a child unattended who is incapable of caring for themselves. Nor may a parent or guardian leave an unattended child in the care of another person who is unable or unwilling to provide adequate supervision.

Children should be picked up promptly by closing time. Children who need to contact their caregivers are welcome to use the library phone.
